9 - Research project abstract

The research aims to investigate the new urban landscapes as they emerge in relation to the recent waves of forced migration (FM) using the perspective of urban sociology. More specifically, it aims to examine the changes affecting the use(s) of the city both in terms of social perceptions, and of the mental representation(s) of space.

Instability in the Mediterranean and Middle Eastern area has triggered a rapid surge of FM, as highlighted by the most influential research centres (i.e. The Migration Observatory, UNHCR, ISMU). In this scenario, cities are experiencing the speed and intensity of forced migration in terms of:

- redistribution of substantial masses of people in a "pending" situation, firstly from a spatial point of view, and political, social and cultural point of view;
- new urban demands which emerge primarily in and across both the open and closed spaces of districts. In this context, the urban fringe as well as partial or total abandoned areas often becomes a locus of genuine concentration of these populations.

The research will be carried out in 11 regions (out of 20), prioritising frontier, first access and/or transit places in and across the Italian peninsula.

Research questions include:

- What kind of changes are taking place on the perception/representation of urban space in relation to the uses and presence of these populations?
- What effects are FM having on urban restructuring (security, access to services, social practices)?
- What kind of consequences are the immigration policies that have been adopted at national and local level producing in cities?

Research outcomes include:

- A review of policies/practices in the most involved EU countries, which deal with initial reception;
- A review of reception policies/practices in the Italian regions and the study of the critical relationships between reception models, allocation, and settlement;
- A mapping of the refugee shelters in the investigated regions, including the organization, operation and their relationship with the city;

- A mapping of new populations on the basis of their geographical origins, the paths followed as well as their concentration and distribution in the regions' areas (urban centre, suburbs, urban sprawl, rural areas);
- A quantitative survey (questionnaire) to highlight the specific urban demands of forced migrants;
- A quantitative national survey of Prefetti (the State's highest representatives in each Italian province) to determine strengths and weaknesses in the implementation of reception policies;
- A qualitative survey (participant observation) in a representative sample of urban areas with the collection of audio-visual materials of space(s) observed.

The study of spatial representation will make use of a well-established methodology. Moreover, the project highlights a national coverage and it will work on the activation of migrants, by directly engaging them in various stages of the research.

PART B

1 - State of the art

Migration processes are a relevant topic of sociological reflection and several disciplinary approaches have investigated multiculturalism, integration, labour-market changes, etc. Specifically, some fields of study within urban sociology examine migration (Pollini, Scidà 2002; Ambrosini 2005; Kaczynski 2008; Cotesta 2009), because, on the one hand, the city has historically been a gathering point of mobility flows and the intensification of globalization over the past 40 years produced a radical change in the meaning of distance (Robertson 1992; Giddens 1994); on the other hand, because the presence of migrants produces a re-signification of both urban and rural places and a reorganization of local welfare (Alexander 2003; Benhabib 2006).

In this regard, the concept of "space of flows" (Castells 2010) recalls the importance of mobility in the contemporary city (Urry 2007) and migration is now one of the most evident phenomena of globalization (Skeldon 2014), which entails the increased speed and intensity of population movements and mobility.

Some scholars have focused on the reasons which lead migrants to move exposing contradictions inherent in the phenomenon: while money, goods and information are a relatively free flow across borders, this same right is still denied to people (Richmond 1994). Other scholars have concentrated on the consequences of these experiences at individual level (Chicco et al, 2015; Montero 2015).

The escalation of instability in the Mediterranean and Middle Eastern areas has triggered a rapid surge of migration due to reasons of war and economic crisis, as highlighted by The Migration Observatory over the last years. According to EUROSTAT (2015), the number of asylum applicants increased by more than 150% in the third quarter of 2015 compared with the same quarter of 2014 and almost doubled compared with the second quarter of 2015. More than one million people arrived in Europe by sea in 2015, of which 153.000 came to Italy (UNHCR 2015).

Although Italy is becoming a multicultural society, it does not mean that it is also inclusive and cohesive (Zanfrini 2015). The right to political as well as economic and social citizenship of migrants is not always fully satisfied and the erosion of the welfare state can further complicate the process of integration of newcomers.

Housing and living in the city are a crucial aspect for the integration of migrants. The City and, more generally, territories undergo a social pressure that can alter both the traditional organizational structure and the social uses of space, starting from the open ones. Equally critical is the situation of work, education, health that are just a few areas where immigration highlights the weaknesses of definition, planning and delivery of public policies.

In addition, categories like "mobility" and "people" need to be continuously revised, because of the massive redistribution of substantial masses of individuals, who leave their countries of origin because of war, persecution and extreme poverty in search of safety especially on the European continent. This massive shift evokes issues repeatedly highlighted by Sassen (1996; 2006; 2014) and Davis (2006) who refer to the so-called "marginal populations" which migrate to more developed urban areas of the planet. People who, on the one hand, contribute to "the slow accretion of shantytowns to the shell of the city" (Davis 2006: 151) and, on the other, are unlikely to integrate from a territorial point of view, nor to exercise the rights of citizenship in the short term.

In this sense, urban places become the main stage from which to observe how urban uses change. In particular, the open spaces (public and/or private, according to the conceptual model proposed by Németh and Schmidt 2011), individually and collectively accessible, become the focus of the social observation with the aim at understanding how the city is changing (Mazzette 2013, Bergamaschi, Castrignanò 2014, Bozzo 2014, Gazzola, Prampolini, Rimondi 2014, Mela 2014, Segatori 2014, Colloca 2015).

These changes have an impact both on social perception and on the mental representation of space of the various urban populations, as revealed by the avenue of studies on "urban landscape" whose aim is to promote the knowledge on the role of territory in the daily life, starting from the complexity of realities that differ from each other as regards social, cultural and ideological origins (Zerbi 1994).

2 – Detailed description of the project: methodology, targets and results that the project aims to achieve and their significance in terms of advancement of knowledge

The national research group is formed by the following Local Units (LUs):

LU 1 Sassari, leader;

LU 2 Venice;

LU 3 Bologna;

LU 4 Catania;

LU 5 Genoa;

LU 6 Turin;

LU 7 Perugia;

LU 8 Trieste;

LU 9 Milan-Bicocca;

LU 10 Foggia (The University of Teramo is part of this LU);

The methodology of the research programme is divided into three main phases, due to the complexity of the investigated phenomena, the multidimensionality of the research questions and the specific characteristics of informants in the field of observation.

The first two phases are common to all units under the coordination of the leading LU of Sassari, while the third phase will engage each LU in the study of one or more geographical areas which are considered emblematic of regional specificity. In order to provide a general comparison between different observed areas, each LU will produce qualitative and quantitative databases built up with uniform procedures. Data gathering procedures will be assured by steady cooperation between the PI and LUs' supervisors by means of methodological workshops. Detailed tasks and activities of local units are provided in each local programme (Section 3).

The first phase will focus on a) the problematization of the national and international scientific debate on forced migration and its impact on territories; b) the collection and processing of aggregate data; c) the analysis of documentary sources.

The second phase will comprise two sample surveys:

the first will address the target population of forced migrants, and, thus, will concern about the cultural distance between observer and observed in the operationalization of research concepts.

The second will involve all the Italian Prefetti due to their role as primary responsible for welcoming refugees.

These two phases are not to be understood in a chronological sense and are all common to the LUs under the coordination of the leading UL of Sassari.

In the third phase several qualitative methods (mainly ethnographic, interactive and participatory techniques) will be used, further aiming at testing their effectiveness in the study of phenomena on a wide regional scale.

The mix of research methods can vary depending on the activities of each LU and can be geared to the specific characteristics of the investigated contexts.

The overall research design will be based on a methodological pluralism which allows us to articulate and differentiate the research techniques in the field with the aim of reaching an unified reconstruction of empirical phenomena for analysis and interpretation.

The scheme to be adopted is consistent with the targets of the research program and with the research hypotheses that put forced migration in connection with:

a) changes in the urban landscape;

b) the process of urban reorganization;

c) the urban and territorial effects of reception policies.

The first phase is focused on the scientific debate on the subject of this study, on the documentary sources and on the spatial data.

It is divided mainly into:

1) the analysis of policies and interventions at different spatial scales and in the different investigated contexts (with a comparative focus on the best practices implemented at local level in other European countries);

2) a mapping of the reception facilities and a classification of their functions and organization;

3) the study of the critical relationships between reception models, allocation, and stay;
4) a territorial mapping of presences and the socio-demographic profiling of forced migrants in the regional contexts investigated (Friuli-Venezia Giulia, Liguria, Veneto, Sardinia, Sicily, Abruzzo, Puglia, Umbria, Emilia Romagna, Piedmont and Lombardy).

At this stage the main problem is the retrieval of data for the setting up of a secondary database organized in observed areas and different spatial scales.

The documentary sources will be international (i.e. The Migration Observatory at Oxford, UNHCR, NGOs,) national (Ministry of Interior, Ministry of Justice, the Parliamentary Inquiry Commission on reception, identification and detention system of migrants, the Protection System for Asylum Seekers and Refugees, Istat, ISMU, "Médecins Sans Frontières", "Doctors for Human Rights – Italy", etc.) and local official sources (prefectures, municipalities, System of Protection for Asylum Seekers and Refugees – SPRAR - centres), public-private managed refugees shelters, Identification and Expulsion Centres (CIEs), Welcoming Centres - some of which are First Aid and Home Centres -, local observatory on the administrative detention of immigrants and the reception of asylum seekers, trade unions, associations, etc., that can provide useful information in order to reconstruct a highly heterogeneous territorial framework.

The second phase calls for the construction of a sample of migrants, specifically limited to the asylum seekers, in the reception centres within the investigated regions.

The design and administration of the survey tool (questionnaire) will imply a challenging cultural mediation that goes beyond linguistic aspects and will concern the operationalization of research concepts related to socio-graphic and behavioural information as well as to the attitudes of respondents. The survey's results will be examined within a national-scale framework.

In addition, a further survey will be administered to all Prefetti, due to their being primarily responsible for welcoming refugees with the aim of determine strengths and weaknesses in the implementation of reception policies and interventions in the Italian regions.

The third phase considers a plurality of qualitative techniques according to the specific contexts of each LU. Information gathering and qualitative research techniques represent the core of the field research, because they will offer essential interpretive keys to achieve the project targets: a) the changes in the urban landscape; b) the process of urban reorganization; c) the urban and territorial effects of the reception policies.

The considered techniques are:

1. direct field observation, with a flexible framework in terms of participation, visibility, structure;
2. interviews with key informants (professionals, experts, cultural mediators/intermediaries will be selected according to the specific needs of the LUs);
3. non-standard techniques for the investigation of spatial orientations (representations, cognitive maps, etc.), which are appropriate to deal with cultural distances and language barriers (i.e. the Jeu de Reconstruction Spatiale, developed by Ramadier and Bronner 2007);
4. interactive procedures for overcoming such distances and limits, based on the techniques developed in the field of Action-Research in rural areas, geared to participation and social learning;
- 5) expressive and narrative activities aimed at creating self-produced accounts (video, text, etc.) by the observed subjects.

Each LU will define one or more emblematic territorial areas within investigated regions.

The expected results cannot necessarily be classifiable along with the described stages, but will represent a comprehensive analytical report of the research activities.

However, we would expect, inter alia

- 1) an analysis of policies and actions, also in comparative terms, including the reconstruction of the different scenarios as emerged in the territorial specificities and the study of the critical relationships between reception models, allocation, and stay;
- 2) a classification of refugees shelters and the identification of different settlement patterns in the various regional or local contexts;
- 3) the description of properties of the investigated populations, in terms of social characteristics as well as their location and concentration;
- 4) an analytical description of the urban demands expressed by forced migrants and their territorialization practices;
- 5a) the representation of spaces and places which define the urban landscapes influenced by new social presences, with maps that focus on individual perception up to larger spatial scales;
- 5b) multimedia and audio-visual materials documenting the experience of forced migrants and the transformations of urban landscapes.

The scientific significance is represented by the acquisition of knowledge about the investigated phenomena and the establishing of a relevant knowledge base and benchmarking.

This will be of value due to the scale of the investigated area and the depth of the analysis, not only for sociology (especially environmental and territorial sociology), but also and crucially, to inform policy measures development and delivery both at national and regional levels.

From a disciplinary point of view, there will be enhanced understanding of the acquisition of methodological knowledge which will be of benefit not only within sociological studies, but also to geographical, territorial, anthropological, planning and normative fields of study.

The research project will make a substantial contribution to the knowledge of:

- 1) the very nature of the observed phenomena;
- 2) the extent of the current phenomena of forced migration for which there is still a sparse literature for an appropriate interpretation, particularly from the perspective of spatial and territorial sociology;
- 3) the specific approach adopted in this research programme focuses on the landscape dimension of urban transformations influenced by forced migration, gearing the whole research system on social representation and perception of places for their ability to modify the material structure of territory;
- 4) a sociologically-oriented initiative to define a broader concept of "forced migration" than that of the UN/DESA – Population Division, which refers to a mobility resulted from removal measures and evacuation, imposed by authorities. The complexity of this research project allows us to pinpoint innovative ways (in terms of design, regulations, organization, etc.) to respond to the issues entailed by the investigated phenomenon.

An analysis of the findings of each LUs will be provided on a comparative basis and published in the final report.

The research targets will be prioritised on the basis of the allocated resources and this would require a new operating design, due to the specificity and complexity of the investigated topic and the above-mentioned lack of a well-established body of research in Italy.

Knowledge transfer will be through publications, workshops and seminars which will help the development of guidelines which support the action of institutions, third sector and the different actors involved in urban governance.

3 - Project development, with identification of the role of each research unit and research organizations involved, with regards to expected targets, and related modalities of integration and collaboration

The project is divided into three phases, as illustrated in the "Detailed description" and it will be developed as follows:

LU 1 (Sassari, leader)

Sardinia has always been a place of emigration rather than immigration. Currently the presence of forced migrants is massive and evident. Reception centres are being hosted in abandoned public and private buildings, mostly located in peripheral and suburban areas.

The LU will investigate the multifunctionality of urban and suburban streets as one of the most relevant space of relationships of these populations. The streets will be observed from four perspectives: 1) the street "to know" the city as a phase of orientation; 2) the street "to protest" as an exercise of citizenship; 3) the street "to ask" as an access to resources; 4) the street "to meet their own kind".

Relational areas are not separated mechanistically; the aim is to understanding what urban practices emerge from the intersection of these four relational realms.

The LU will identify cultural mediators and/or experts, who will act as intermediaries to assist the work of field research. The LU will coordinate all the LUs and will manage the construction, coordination of the LUs in the administration of the surveys and the analysis of collected data.

LU 2 (Venice)

The Veneto has attracted immigrants and placed them (rather than integrating them) as cheap labour in SMEs and in elderly care. Forced migration (FM) occurs in a situation of economic crisis, thus generating the widespread perception that they have exceeded the acceptable level of "saturation" in accommodating them.

The LU will investigate the dynamics and effects of the FM in the sprawling city of Veneto, characterized by heterogeneous forms of reception (political speeches often openly xenophobic and focused on urban security; inclusive practices based on networks of widespread acceptance of local authorities, families, associations, parishes, social centres).

The LU will develop:

- policy analysis of the institutional/territorial system; analysis of socio-political conflicts in the collaboration between social private and volunteering;
- representation (in a test area of urban sprawl) of the supply/demand of the city induced by FM.

During the first year, the LU will provide a scientific and methodological support to the LUs regarding the techniques of visual sociology through focused seminars.

LU 3 (Bologna)

The LU aims to reconstruct the hospitality paths of migrants in Bologna in relation to the location of the facilities in urban space, as well as their different management modes. The focus will be on the everyday life in these facilities and the relation with the city.

The LU will take into account the following local facilities:

- SPRAR with 122 places available in 8 facilities;
- some special reception shelters (Centri di Accoglienza Straordinaria) for guests awaiting the outcome of their asylum application;
- the first regional hub for asylum seekers provided by the national plan approved on July 10, 2014 by the State-Regions-Local Authorities Conference (Conferenza Stato-Regioni-Enti Locali).

LU 4 (Catania)

The LU investigates the life experience and the social practices of "forced migrants" in south-eastern Sicily, especially at the CARA of Mineo and Pian del Lago near Caltanissetta and the effects on the corresponding territories. After mapping the presence of forced migrants, the aim is to analyse the experience within the CARA, that is, how the governing legislation combines with the social setting of living in CARA's spaces. CARA are administrative and geographical areas, governed by several institutions and organizations, which sometimes overlap one with another, thus posing problems of governance.

Overall, the LU aims to contribute with a reflection on the understanding of the present as an 'Age of Rights' and the validity of the current narrative of Europe as an 'Europe of rights', within the reception system here investigated.

LU 5 (Genoa)

The LU aims to study the presence of migrants in Liguria (between 2010 and 2015) by using qualitative techniques and existing sources (both official and unofficial). The study will focus on Genoa, the regional capital, and Ventimiglia, a border town which experienced a conflict situation in 2015, in connection with transit requests to France.

The research will consider the nomenclature and the anthropological types of migrants, types of settlement, the perception of the landscape and the relationships with it, in its various components (Art. 1 of the European Landscape Convention) as well as possible design and technical solutions for temporary hospitality.

During the first year, the LU will provide a scientific and methodological support to the LUs regarding the research technique of the Jeu de Reconstruction Spatiale (JRS) through focused seminars.

LU 6 (Turin)

In September 2015, 6167 asylum seekers were present in Piedmont; only 958 of these are included in SPRAR projects, whereas the others live in a large number of reception centres in different municipalities of the region. The aims of the LU are: a) a mapping of the reception centres in Piedmont and of the migrants living in them; b) a study of the ways in which migrants interact with local communities and places.

The LU will study the places of migrants' everyday life, with particular attention for public spaces and sports as well as cultural and religious facilities. In addition, the researchers will analyse the processes through which forced migrants create a mental map of urban places, including the assets and symbolic values they contain.

LU 7 (Perugia)

In October 2015, 1229 forced migrants were hosted in the facilities of Umbria, and 378 in the SPRAR centres. About 50% of the assigned refugees left soon after their arrival. These migrants occupy their time in two ways: 1) by staying in the residences allotted to them (including, in Foligno, wooden houses built in remote areas after the earthquake of 2009); by continuously moving along the roads that link residences with urban centres and panhandling in the parking areas of supermarkets and hospitals.

The LU aims to detect how urban settings change due to the melting pot that occurs in the streets and in large parking areas for public use, and to what extent such multicultural coexistence could affect other urban areas, thus, altering their traits with unknown effects to be explored.

LU 8 (Trieste)

The LU will focus on the following aspects: the re-emergence of the regulation/differentiation functions of the border and its resulting spatial materialization; different targeted and widespread reception policies (disused barracks, hotels, apartment buildings); how women live and perceive the territory; the role that these new populations have in the maintenance in marginal and peripheral contexts; the role of the foreign communities of recent settlement as a point of attraction or bridge/transit for new arrivals; identifying new identity landmarks of long-time residents and foreign people as well as old and new immigrants; the representation of urban spaces in terms of uses and promotion of intercultural communication.

LU 9 (Milan)

The LU will study the case of Milan according to the objectives of the project.

During the last two years, 84.500 forced migrants passed across the city and received assistance and shelter before leaving to other European destinations, except for a few hundreds of asylum seekers.

The main place of migrants arrival was the "Stazione Centrale", that became a large reception centre in the city. The local management of flows was organized by an emergency unit created by the local government, police forces, social sector and the company "Grandi Stazioni", with a strong contribution from citizens that was taken as a "model" by the EU institutions.

The LU aims to analyse: 1) the transformation of the "Stazione Centrale"; 2) how this urban location has influenced the positive management of "refugees emergency"; 3) how the migrants flows was managed at local level, highlighting its peculiarity, the role of different actors and the conditions in which they have operated.

LU 10 (Foggia/Teramo)

This LU follows three research lines, activating two types of scientific inquiry on the basis of qualitative methodologies:

- a mapping and classification of foreign populations, with survey analysis in Puglia and Abruzzo. Specifically for CARA in Bari and Foggia, the aim is to establish to what extent the presence of migrants facilitate the recruitment of 'black market' workforce by criminal organizations;
- the collection of in-depth interviews and video accounts in the "alberghi diffusi" (hosting places created by Regione Puglia) and ghettos or abandoned rural homes in Puglia, as well as in urban and/or coastal tourist places in Abruzzo;
- an ethnographic study on the structural emergency of the sea borders, focused on Bari and Pescara with interviews to civil and military officials and a sociological visual study of the displacement forms and the border perceptions by institutions, migrants and local residents.

The scientific products of the research project will represent a theoretical, methodological and empirical body of knowledge that will be useful in supporting both the knowledge of urban and territorial impacts of forced migration in Italy, and the development of inclusive urban policies and programs devoted to reception and social inclusion of vulnerable populations in relation to the experience of leaving their countries of origin because of war and persecution. This knowledge will be acquired progressively in close connection with the activities planned in the three phases that comprise the project.

As regard the scientific impact, the research project shall generate new knowledge on:

1. the phenomenon of forced migration in Italy, both in terms of the geographical origins of populations, and of their location and concentration in the investigated regions;
2. the framework of reception policies currently in place at national level, with references to the experiences of the EU countries and to the Italian regional contexts;
3. the effects of the national reception policies in urban environments and landscapes;
4. the strengths and weaknesses of the national reception system;
5. the organizational framework and the territorial reception facilities that host migrants in the investigated regions and their relationship with the city and the territories;
6. how Italian urban landscapes are changing in relation to the perception and representations of urban space from the migrants' perspective;
7. the urban demands of migrants on the basis of their current life contexts;
8. the daily social practices.

In terms of possible application, the knowledge of the strengths and weaknesses of the current system of national reception policies allows a reflection aimed at developing guidelines that can facilitate the overcoming of the crisis by improving the tools and practices for address and manage the phenomenon of migration at national and local level.

Besides, the research findings will be of support for the activities of investigation, organization and evaluation of the reception services of migrants by specific institutions. In particular, the Department for Civil Liberties and Immigration of the Interior Ministry, the System of Protection for Asylum Seekers and Refugees (SPRAR) – officialized by Law n.189/2002 and managed by ANCI – and the Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry on Detention and Reception Conditions of Migrants.

Furthermore, the research findings will contribute to the planning and organization activities developed by these institutions related to: a) the "Hot Spots", that is, the structures that the EU has planned for the border countries, such as Italy and Greece, for the identification of migrants, who want to apply for asylum. Currently, there are five operating centres in Sicily, coordinated by an office in Catania; b) the regional and inter-regional hubs for the first reception that should replace the CARA (Reception centres for asylum seekers) and which will have to deal with the "relocation" of the entitled to asylum in other EU countries.

The research team will also provide an educational proposal for the reception experts in the above-mentioned institutions, based on the research findings. In this regard, a training program is crucial to promote a professionally-established reception service in order to overcome no longer acceptable spontaneous practices of hospitality, given the structural nature of the phenomenon of forced migration.

This project aims to investigate the urban and socio-territorial change in relation to the recent forced migrations and it is also intended as an action of social inclusion: while engaging the perspective of migrants in understanding urban change, the research aims to directly and repeatedly engaging them in the various stages of the research: in the survey by questionnaire; in the reconstruction of the perceptions and representations of urban spaces; in the creation of self-produced accounts (video, text, etc.). In this regard, the process of inclusion and the social impact of the project can be understood in terms of involvement and listening as well as an experience of mutual knowledge and interaction.

The research will cover more than half of the Italian regions (the study will be carried out in 11 regions out of 20), where more than 65% of the Italian population live. Specifically, it must be pointed out that this investigation presents a significant geographical coverage that will allow the research team to study the urban and socio-territorial change in several different urban contexts, depending on whether they are frontier, first access and/or transit places in and across the Italian peninsula. This will allow to achieve results to be generalized and, thus, to partly compensate the above-mentioned lack of a well-established body of research in Italy.

Partecipazione e conflitto, Franco Angeli (Magazine A for the area of membership);
Società, Mutamento, Politica. Rivista italiana di sociologia della Firenze University Press.

Research

How it is detectable from the publications, not only recent, over time research interests of Roberto Segatori focused primarily on four main areas: a) theoretical reflection on the general concept of power; b) studies and research on political phenomena and the local arenas; studies and research on public policy, with particular reference in social policy; d) studies and research on models of urban governance and territorial in general.

The first area of study was the subject of a long-depth starting from the approach of the classics of political sociology as Max Weber and Roberto Michels. The contribution that best represents these trend is the book L'ambiguità del potere. Necessità, ossessione, libertà, published in 1999 for the types of Donzelli.

The second area, next to some research on particular foreign situations as in the former Yugoslavia, has given rise to a vast production of national realities dedicated to regional and local powers. The contributions of the many that best testify to this interest are found in volumes Istituzioni e potere politico locale (Franco Angeli, 1992) e I Sindaci. Storia e sociologia dell'amministrazione locale in Italia dall'Unità ad oggi (Donzelli, 2003). Latest studies cover issue such Sintomi populistici nella crisi italiana e Thatcher's Victims Vs Beveridge's Sons. The new cleavage of European parties, as well as the book Sociologia dei fenomeni politici (see Publications).

The third area of research, dedicated to social policies, has run translated into empirical studies in a comparative perspective. A significant contribution, among others, is reported in the book Disagio psichico, salute della donna e terza età. Lo stato dei servizi in Umbria negli ultimi venti anni (ESI, 1989).

Comparative studies are simplified from the essay Soziale und kulturelle Probleme einer alternden Bevölkerung - Ein Vergleich zwischen nördlichem und südlichem Europa, in W. Klüsche (Fachhochschule Niederrhein, Fachbereich Sozialwesen, Mönchengladbach, 1996). More recent is the wise Storia e sviluppo delle politiche sociali in Umbria (see Publications).

The fourth area of research has given rise to reflections and investigations on the issues of the relationship between sociology and spatial planning, urban governance and its implications with respect to the mixing of social powers. After a significant essay entitled La sociologia e il piano, in "Sociologia e professioni", n. 8-9, 1992- 1993, the most recent contributions are provided in Schedule of Publications, which are also the result of participation as Head of Local Unit for the University of Perugia two Italian PRIN: 2007 (Experiences of territorial governance) e 2009 (Mobile populations and public spaces).

Third Mission Activities

As activities of the Third Mission Roberto Segatori performed the following functions:

- Member of the Editorial Team of "Elderly Project" 2nd Social-Health Plan of the Region of Umbria;
- Member of the Group for the Preparation of the Social Plan of the Umbria Region and author of the part relating to "Professional skills and training";
- Member of the Evaluation Committee for the service companies of the Province of Perugia regarding the Regional Law no. 2 "Youth Entrepreneurship" (beginning in 2002);

After graduating in Industrial Relations (Political Sciences) marks 110/110 cum laude, she received her Ph.D. in Historical Demography. Then she achieved the authorization to practice as Chartered Accountant and the Register of Journalists.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

Sociology of organizations, labor and economic processes: the industrial relations and the analysis of welfare systems in relation to local development processes and to models of governance. Specific attention is given to issues of ethics and corporate social responsibility.

Urban sociology: the relationship among land use, urban planning and civic engagement and the identification of a new paradigm for the urban condition.

Media studies: the relationship among information, communication and narrativity of politics to investigate the processes of democratic participation. The aim is to discover a new set of sense to politics activity.

Methods for social research: ethnographic methods, network analysis and "grounded theory".

OTHER EXPERIENCES

Before being Assistant Professor, she was:

- Researcher at the CENSIS in the field of labor policy (1992-1997). Later on she was appointed Head of marketing sector at ATENEA - ARPAClub, CENSIS's company for the online training (2004-2005);
- Coordinator of the Political Secretariat of the Undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior (1996-1999). As part of this office, she was responsible for institutional relations (Parliamentary Committees and political organizations) and external communication. She has also actively participated in the drafting of legislative texts about immigration (Turco-Napolitano Law);
- Project manager at INVITALIA S.p.a. (National Agency for the local business development). During this experience (2000-2004) she became interested in development of business plans for social enterprises and franchising networks. She was also responsible for the Observatory for Female Entrepreneurship;
- Consultant for many Consultancy Companies:
 - European Commission DG XIII Telecommunications, Information Market and Circulation Research, Telematics Applications Programme, Sector 11 Engineering Sciences (Project Mirti);
 - "PROSPETTIVA SUBAPPENNINO" of Foggia, EQUAL project (network analysis for the identification of methods and procedures shared between business and employment centers for the employment of disabled persons);

- "CAPITALE LAVORO" SPA of Rome (investigation about the introduction of law 30/2003 and its effects, "the de-regulation of the labour market");
