9 - Research project abstract

The main goal of the research project is the analysis of the "responses" which European political decision-makers and other economic and social actors worked out in order to face the main crises that characterised the "short century" (i.e. from the period that followed the First World War to the period which followed the fall of the Berlin Wall and the end of Communism). The members of the various research units will focus their attention on one hand on some definite test cases through traditional multi-archival approach, on the other on the recent historical production related to the crises experienced by the "Old continent" during the Twentieth Century". Five major periods of crisis and transtion have been singled out: (a) the immediate post First World War period, (b) the Period which followed the economic and financial crisis that started in the US and rapidly spread in Europe, (c) the post Second World War years, (d) the "long 1970s" with the early wave of the "globalization", (e) the period which followed the Fall of the Berlin wall and the end of the Communist regimes. The research will try to verify the assumption following which every crisis led most European decision-makers to create and/or strengthen forms of international cooperation, that originated important organizations such as the League of Nations, the United Nations Organization, the ERP, the Concil of Europe, the ECSC, the CSCE, etc.

The results of the project will represent a relevant progress in the knowledge of the major events and dynamics which shaped Twentieth Century Europe. Such scholarly results will be the object of dissemination among the members of the international scientific community through publications, organization of workshops, as well as of a final conference, the activation of a website and an electronic forum open to scholars from different nationalities. Last but not least the outcome of the research may be of some interest to politicians, diplomats and other "practitioners" of international affairs who are confronting the new most recent and dramatic challenges in the European context and would probably require new forms of international cooperation.

PART B

B.1

1 - State of the art

During the last few years historians of contemporary Europe from different nations have tried to give a wider evaluation of the history of the "Old Continent" during the short "Twentieth Century" (as far as the Italian historiography, see for example the most recent contribution by Simona Colarizi, "Novecento d'Europa" (Rome-Bari, Laterza, 2015)). Most of them, however, have usually focused their attention on more definite periods, especially the immediate post-war years after the Great War (see for example the most recent volume by Adam Tooze, "Deluge. The Great War and the Remaking of Global Order", (London, Allen Lane, 2014) or after the Second World War (one of the most well-known case is the study by Tony Judt, "Postwar. A history of Europe since 1945", (London, Penguin Books, 2005)). Other historians have focused their attention on definite phenomena or/and definite geographical areas of the "old continent" (see for example the volume by Timothy Snyder, "Bloodlands. Europe between Hitler and Stalin", (London, Vintage Books, 2011). So the need of a comprehensive analysis of the "short" Twentieth century is still needed. Moreover the terms "short century" or the choice of the periods that immediately followed the "Great War" and the Second World War as starting points of several analyses demonstrate the relevance of some dramatic "crises" and of the periods of upheaval and radical change in understanding the history of contemporary Europe, which appear to be a series of "transitions". Recently "transition" has attracted increasing interest as analytical category for investigating the continuities and the traumas within the "longue durée" of "modernity" (see for example the contribution by P. Pombeni and H. G. Haupt (eds), "La transizione come problema storiografico", Bologna, il Mulino, 2013). Many analyses have been focusing on the concept of "transition" in such areas as social and cultural history; also in this context a new focus on the international system would be necessary to highlight the particular dynamics of the dramatic changes which occurred during the Twentieth Century. The effort of the various research units to compare the empiric results of their research on "crises" and "responses" with the ideal-typical features of the "transition" on an international scale is one of the methodological novelties of the project. Moreover few historians have tried to investigate the whole Twentieth century as a period of recurrent dramatic crises, predominantly of an international character, but with strong domestic impacts, and to link such crises with the "responses" worked out by political decision-makers, intellectuals, experts, political parties, social and economic organisations and movements. As far as the "responses" are concerned, it may be argued that the main goal has almost always been the one of the creation of a stable international order, mainly in the European context. The instruments which appeared most suitable to the safeguard of a stable order and international peace have appeared to be various types of international organisations: from the League of Nations to the United Nations, from the ERP to the OEEC, from the ECSC to the European Community, etc. Once again we do not lack general histories of the major international organisations (see for example for the League of Nations and the UN the volume by Mark Mazower, "Governing the World. The History of an Idea" (London, Penguin Books, 2012) or for the EEC the book by Wilfried Loth, "Building Europe. A History of European Unification" (Berlin, de Gruyter, 2015). But most contributions focus on the a single organisation and on its development and they leave in the background the more general issue of the link between "crises" and "responses", as well as the interplay between international and national communities. In conclusion, although distinguished historians have dealt with single test cases, very few have tried to analyse the problem in a comprehensive way taking into account the latest theoretical contributions about a transnational history or global history approach. Those considerations are at the origins of the research project which is put forward by the proponents.

2 – Detailed description of the project: methodology, targets and results that the project aims to achieve and their significance in terms of advancement of knowledge

The main goal of the research project is the analysis, through the investigation of several single test cases and the discussion of the historical production and conceptualization of the "responses" which political decision-makers, economic milieu, public opinions, political parties and social movements gave to the main crises that shaped Europe during the so-called "short" twentieth century. In this context it is possible to single out five main periods: 1) the period during which after the end of the "Great War" the "old continent" was characterised by political, economic and social disclocation, 2) the years that were characterised by the impact of the dramatic economic and financial crisis started in 1929, 3) the period which followed the Second World War with the division of the "Old continent" into two conflicting parts, d) the "long 1970s", a period which was characterised by the impact that the beginning of the "globalisation" process had on Europe, e) the late 1980s/the early 1990s, a period which was largely influenced by the consequences on the European continent of the end of the "last war for Europe" (according to F. Romero's definition) after the fall of the Berlin Wall and the defeat of the Communist ideology. In all the periods of major crises experienced by Europe during the Twentieth century, most decision-makers thought that the best solution to the problems that Europe had to face could be found through international cooperation and the creation of multilateral organisations: after the end of the First World War the League of Nations, on the morrow of the 1929 economic crisis several international conferences and the related plans; after the end of the Second World War, besides the creation of the UNO, both western Europe and eastern Europe were characterised by the creation of numerous regional and "ad hoc" organisations (in the West the OEEC, the Council of Europe, the Brussels Pact organisation, the Atlantic Pact, the ECSC, the ECD, the WEU, till the EEC and the EURATOM; in the East the KOMINFORM, the COMECON, the Warsaw Pact); in the 1970s Western Europe and Eastern Europe created the CSCE, while the EEC experienced radical reforms; the end of the Cold War in Europe was characterised by the creation of the European Union (EU), the reform of the Atlantic alliance and new forms of cooperation.

Although the attention will focus on the European continent, the research will deal with the close interaction which characterised the European crises and other geographical areas and international dynamics. For example it would be impossible to examine the European responses without taking into considerations the close connection with the development, the decline and the end of the European empires. Moreover, if we take into consideration the 1970s and the period of the late 1980s/early 1990s it would be of fundamental relevance to examine the main aspects of the relation/confrontation between Europe - a vital part of the "West" - with the so-called "Global South". A further area which must be investigated is the one of the transatlantic relationship; since the creation of the League of Nations the role played by the US was a fundamental one in the various attempts at creating a stable European order.

As it has been already stated, it is not the intention of the proponents of the research project to cover in the greatest detail all the events and all the dimensions of the historical period which have been taken into consideration. The study aims at singling out, through a comparative analysis, the continuities and discontinuities, as well as the differences and the similarities in the responses that European decision-makers provided at different times in order to give a comprehensive solution to the need of stable international order. The study of particular cases, on the basis of a multi-archival approach will be one of the main instrument in order to achieve the main goals of the research, but the scholars involved in the research will start from a careful and critical analysis of the historical production and conceptualizations offered by the major international historical schools. To that end it is regarded as a major objective the organisation of methodological workshops which will offer the opportunity of exchange of views and scholarly confrontation with historians, political scientists, economists from various foreign countries.

Every unit will develop, on the basis of the competences of the participants as well as of their interests, some specific topics: (1) the Padua unit, with the Trento FBK sub-unit, will deal with the theoretical debate on the concepts of "crises", "transition" and "response", as well as with the "European" responses, especially as far as the European integration is concerned. (2) The Trento unit will deal with the crisis of the European Empires and how this transformed the European identities. (3) the Perugia unit and (4) the Pavia unit will focus their attention on the interaction between the "crises" and the responses based on the creation of wider international organisations, especially the League of Nations and the United Nations Organisation, without forgetting that in the latest decades the EC/EU has been a model for the creation outside Europe of regional organisations in order to face the globalisation. (5) the Messina unit will mainly deal with the economic dimension of the "crises" and their "responses". Its concern will be with a "longue durée" approach: from a segmented nation-founded international dis-order in the Thirties, through the bipolarism, up to the end of the Cold War, international institutions were called to a wider role. A few of them were called to play their role in politics, in the meanwhile economics were left to non-political actors like the IMF, WB, OCDE. As far as the more recent periods the unit will focus on the relation/contrast between North and South, especially during the 1970s and the 1980s (from the "spirit of Cancun" to the development of prevailing neo-liberist approaches). Last but not least (6) the unit of the Second Naples University will focus its attention on Germany, as the German case was often the main object of international crises which influenced Europe during the Twentieth Century and the involvement of Germany in international organisations (from the League of Nations to NATO, to the EC/EU, etc,.) was always regarded as an instrument to solve the so-called "German question" and a way to create a stable European order. As the project has to be developed and concluded in a three year time. The proponents will organise their work as follows: 1) first year: general definition of the various characters and timing of the project, singling out of the relevant test cases, beginning of the research (both archival resources and historical production) related to the test cases, intermediary workshop which would involve all the scholars who are members of the project, 2) second year: follow up of the research related to the various test cases, creation of a website, which will give information about the goals and progress of the project, intermediary workshop which would involve Italian and foreign scholars external to the project in order to check both the provisional results and the methodology through a confrontation with other scholars, 3) last year: conclusion of the research with the organisation of an international conference and the publication of the research outcome in conference proceedings and peer-reviewed scholarly journals both in Italian and in English; confrontation with practitioners in the field of international relations in order to disseminate further the results of the project outside the scientific community. In conclusion, as it has already been stated the most recent historical debate has been characterised by the attempt at giving general definitions and interpretation of Twentieth century Europe. The project would give a vital contribution to one of the most lively and promising historiographical debate, which is of much relevance, not only to historians but also to scholars belonging to the field of social sciences, as well as to practitioners and decision-makers in the field of international affairs.

3 - Project development, with identification of the role of each research unit and research organizations involved, with regards to expected targets, and related modalities of integration and collaboration

As the project has to be developed and concluded in a three year time. The proponents will organise their work as follows: 1) first year: general definition of the various characters and timing of the project, singling out of the relevant test cases (e.g. the League of Nations and the problem of economic dislocation in East Central Europe during the 1920s, the response of European powers through their empires to economic crisis of the early 1930s, the early creation of European organisations in the late 1940s, the development of the North-South dialogue through the Lomé agreements of the mid-1970s, the role played by the EU in the project of reunification of the European continent during the 1990s); singling out and recruitment of young researchers, who will be involved in the project through the activation of a "RDT" and of temporary one year and two year fellowships, beginning of the research (both archival resources and historical production) related to the test cases (the research will be based on a multi-archival approach which will involve both state and private archives at an international level (e.g. archives of the major international organisations, as well as of the EC/EU, foreign ministry archives of the major European nations and the US, etc.), an intermediary workshop which would involve all the scholars members of the project, this workshop will aim at an early revision of the project and at favoring an exchange of views, interpretations and informations among the participants. Development of contacts with Italian and, above all, foreign research institutions and colleagues, who are working on topics related to the project. It has to be pointed out that all the members of the various units have formal or unofficial forms of close cooperations with the most important foreign research centres in the field of international and global history (e.g. the P.I. has developed in the past close links with centres such the IRICE of Paris I Sorbonne, "Sciences Politiques" Paris, the IDEAS centre of the London School of Economics and Political Science).

2) second year: follow up of the research related to the various test cases, creation of website dealing with the project, such a website will give information about the goals and progress of the project and will become an open forum in order to favor the discussion among scholars external to the project and members of the project; the organisation of an intermediary workshop which would involve Italian and foreign scholars external to the project in order to check both the provisional results and the methodology through a confrontation with other scholars, publications of the research's early result in scholarly journals and ad hoc working papers.

3) last year: conclusion of the research activities (conclusion of the archival investigations, further development of the website, etc.), organisation of a workshop for the participants to the project; organisation of an international conference open to contributions by scholars external to the project; publication of the research outcomes through conference proceedings and articles which will appear in peer-reviewed scholarly journals both in Italian and in English.

As it has already stated, the most recent historical debate has been characterised by the attempt at giving general definitions and interpretation of Twentieth century Europe. The project would give a vital contribution to one of the most lively and promising historiographical debate, which is of much relevance, not only to historians but also to scholars belonging to the field of social sciences, as well as to practitioners in the field of international affairs. It is also possible to foresee the possibility that the research would become a "start up" for the creation of a centre, open to Italian and foreign scholars, that will focus on the study of the "crises" and "response" in Europe since the early Twentieth Century till today.

Every unit will deal with the specific test cases, which will be closely related to their various topics. The first unit (Padua) with its sub-unit (FBK Trento=, not only will deal with specific test cases, but will deal with the wider issue of conceptualization: moreover it will be in charge of most of the organization aspects (workshops, final conferences, creation and running of a website. dissemination of the scholarly outcome). This justifies the higher sums at the various items of the Padua unit. Most financial resources at the items B and E of the various units will be used for research missions both at Italian and foreign archives, as well as the participation to conferences, workshops, etc. The higher budgets of the Trento and Messina units are justified by the necessity of longer research missions (especially in the US, Latin American countries, etc.). As far as the Trento and Perugia budgets, it must be pointed out their necessity to rely on the activation of two-year research grants.

4 – Possible application potentialities and scientific and/or technological and/or social and/or economic impact of the project

The research can have an important impact into two main areas: on one hand the improvement of scholarly knowledge in the field of international and transnational history, as well as other social sciences; on the other the involvement in a wider debate about the future of the "old continent". As far as the former aspect, it has been already stated that during the last few years there has been a growing interest in the study of Twentieth Century Europe, not only through the point of view of a new narrative of the history of the "old continent", but also through the conceptualization of the different phases, turning points, crises and transitions that characterised the years between the First World War and the end of the Cold War. This scholarly debate has a mainly international character and some works have had a deep impact on historians from different countries and from different historical schools. So the proposed research may contribute to an international scholarly debate and to a strengthening of the role played by the Italian historical school in a wider process of internationalisation.

As far as the latter aspect, with the end of the Cold War, the development in the integration process, the growing involvement of Europe in the globalisation, the appearance of transnational phenomena such as new flows of immigrants, the increasing role of the religious factor, new forms of violence and conflict, European decision-makers, public opinions, the media, etc. face a series of new challenges which are going to influence the future political, economic, social and cultural characters of the European continent. The research on the crises and responses during the twentieth century may give a contribution to the public debate on the problems with which Europe will have to deal with in the near future.

VARSORI Antonio

Professor Antonio Varsori CV

Date and place of birth
08/08/1951 Pontedera (Pisa) Italy

Current position:
Antonio Varsori is full professor of History of International Relations at the University of Padua where he is also member of the Academic Senate.

Academic career:
Graduated in Political Sciences at the University of Padua, started his academic career in the second half the 1970s with a fellowship of the Italian National Research Council abroad, in March 1985 he became lecturer in History of International Relations at the University of Florence; in 1992 he became associate professor of History of International Relations and in 2000 full professor of the same discipline at the University of Florence. In 2003 he moved to the University of Padua, where he has been chairman of the first level degree course in Political Sciences, member of the University Research Committee, Director of the Department of International Studies, in 2011 Director of the Department of Politics, Law and International Studies. In 2014 he has been awarded the "laurea honoris causa" in European Studies by the Babes-Bolyai University of Cluj-Napoca (Romania).

Scholarly activities at national and international level:

He has been twice research fellow at the University of Reading and the University of Southampton and he is currently associate fellow of the Centre "Ideas" of the London School of Economics and Political Science and of the IRICE Centre of the "Université de Paris I Sorbonne". He has been twice – in 2008 and in 2011 – "visiting professor" at the University "SciencesPo" (Paris). He is member of the editorial board/scientific committee of the following journals: "Journal of European Integration History", "Cold War History", "Eunomia", "Res Publica", "Storia e Diplomazia". In 2015 he has become the editor of the journal "Ventunesimo Secolo". He is the responsible of the series "Contemporary International History" of the Franco Angeli publishing house (Milan) and with M. Dumoulin and E. Bussière of the series "Euroclio" of the Peter Lang publishing house (Bern). He has been member and chairman of the NATO Science for Peace and Security Advisory Panel on Human and Societal Dynamics. He has been the founder and the Chairman of the Italian Society for International History (2010-2014), he is currently member of the steering committee of the Society. He has been appointed member of the committee for the publication of the Italian Diplomatic Documents at the Italian Foreign Ministry. He is member of the teaching staff of the specialization course for the competition to the diplomatic service of the School of Government of the LUISS "Guido Carli" University (Rome). He has been member of the selection committee for the post of official at the Italian Senate and member of the selection committee for the competition to the diplomatic career at the Italian Foreign Ministry. He is member of the steering/scientific committee of the "Annual Summer School on the Cold War" (LSE, University of Vienna, EUI, University of Rome Tor Vergata, University of Rome 3, University of Bologna). He has been member of the selection committees for various posts at Italian Universities, as well as member of the selection committees for posts of full professor of international history at the "Université de Paris I Sorbonne" and at "SciencesPo" (Paris). He cooperated with the AERES (France) for the evaluation of research projects and of a research unit of the University of Strasbourg. He has been member of the scientific committee for the learned journals of the ANVUR. He has given lectures to various Italian and foreign Universities and research institutes (Paris I Sorbonne, Paris IV Sorbonne, Paris III Sorbonne Nouvelle, LSE, King's College London, Université de Louvain-la-Neuve, CISC Madrid, College of Europe, etc.). He has been invited to give papers to several conferences in Italy and abroad and has organized numerous conferences and workshops at a national and international level. He has been member of various Ph.D. programmes and has been member of various Ph.D. final discussions at foreign universities (SciencesPo Paris, Paris I Sorbonne, Louvain-la-Neuve, Aix-en-Provence, Angers, Montpellier). He has been twice Jean Monnet Professor of the History of the European Integration (University of Florence, University of Padua); he was in charge of the Jean Monnet Centre of the Excellence at the University of Florence and he has been awarded the title of "Success story" of the Jean Monnet Program. Since 1992 he has joined the Liaison Committee of Historians of Contemporary Europe at the European Commission and in May 2014 he has been elected chairman of the Committee.

Coordination of research activities and administrative responsibilities:

He has been the director of several research projects: three Projects of National Interest financed by the Italian Ministry of Education, University and Research (average budget of every project: 250,000 euros for a total amount of about 750,000 euros), two University research projects financed by the University of Padua (average budget of every project: 50,000 euros for a total amount of 100,000 euros), one project co-financed by the European Economic and Social Committee (about 10,000 euros), one project co-financed by the CEDEFOP (about 30,000 euros), one project financed by the Sturzo institute (about 20,000 euros). He has taken part to other various research projects, both at a national and at an international level, as well as to the project for the first volume of the official history of the European Commission; he is currently member of the steering committee of the project HISTCOM3 for the 3rd volume of the history of the European Commission.

As Director of the Department of Politics, Law and International Studies of the University of Padua (January 2012- September 2015) he had the responsibility for the coordination of about 75 teaching staff members (full professors, associate professors, researchers) four undergraduate courses, and five master courses (about 3,500 students); about 30 units of administrative personnel and of four buildings.

Publications:

He has published more than two hundred and fifty articles and essays in Italian, English, French, German and Spanish. He is the author of twelve volumes, several of them with well-known academic Italian publishers (il Mulino, Laterza, Le Monnier, Sansoni, Rubbettino, etc.) and edited more than twenty volumes, some of them in English with well-known international English-speaking publishing houses (Macmillan, Palgrave, I.B. Tauris, Peter Lang).
